The Joanna Foundation grant played a significant role in supporting the Newberry Opera House's Dufford Arts Education programming during FY24. Grant funds were used to underwrite artistic fees and assist with transportation costs, helping ensure that students throughout our region could experience live performing arts regardless of financial or geographic barriers.

Through this support, thousands of students were able to attend high-quality educational performances that enhanced classroom learning, encouraged creativity, and introduced many young people to the performing arts for the first time. The funding helped schools and community partners participate in programming that may not otherwise have been accessible due to rising transportation and operational costs.

The grant also strengthened partnerships between Newberry Opera House and the School District of Newberry County working together to provide meaningful arts access opportunities for children across diverse backgrounds.

The Joanna Foundation's investment helped remove barriers to participation and ensured that the arts remained accessible, engaging, and impactful for young audiences throughout FY24. Beyond supporting performances themselves, the grant contributed to creating memorable shared experiences that inspired curiosity, learning, and community connection.
